MEMORANDUM FOR: INTELLIGENCE SECTION
Hq. 137th Fighter-Bomber Wing
Alexandria, Louisiana

Attention: Wayne B. Lee, 1st Lt. USAF
3416 Technical Training Squadron
Lowry Air Force Base
Denver, Colorado

SUBJECT: Indexing of Intelligence Publications

REFERENCE: Lt. Wayne B. Lee's Memorandum to Intelligence
Advisory Committee, "Indexing of Intelligence
Publications", dtd. 24 April 1951

1. Your suggestion to simplify intelligence documentation by having each producing agency index its own publications before distribution has been referred to me and has been studied with great interest.

2. The form of "cooperative cataloging" which you propose is an ideal solution to a very complex problem. The application of its principles to the intelligence family, however, would be a monumental undertaking. The major difficulty lies in the fact that we have so many report-producing sources. As of today, there are hundreds of them, and they change frequently. To put your proposal into effect would mean that all sources would have to agree in advance to standard rules of index-card preparation, the use of a single classification scheme, and a uniform filing system. With so many different interests to be considered, it is questionable if a practical method could be evolved that would satisfy the needs of all.

3. In the interest of achieving inter-Agency indexing uniformity, the CIA Library with the cooperation of representatives of other intelligence agencies developed an Intelligence Subject Code in March 1948. The purpose of this ISC is to provide a single method for the classification of documents which treat intelligence subjects. The Code is gradually gaining acceptance, and several intelligence document centers are now using it. You are welcome to review a current copy of the ISC to determine if it can serve a useful purpose in your operations.
